For whoever came up with the saying that “sometimes life is stranger than fiction” might have had Rudy Soto in mind. Indeed, if a script of Soto’s life was written and submitted to Hollywood, it would be rejected for seeming unrealistic. But it’s true, every but of it, from being raised in one of the poorest communities in Nampa, Idaho to a stint in juvenile detention centers throughout the state due to gang involvement prior to relocating to Oregon.

In Portland, Rudy put his life on a different track, which included not only a year spent as the student body President at Portland State University, but also, at the young age of 24, a high-place finish in the 2010 city elections for a seat on the City Council. His campaign wasn't a total loss. With the help of a prominent American Indian professor it helped earn him a scholarship to spend a semester in the Nation's Capitol as part of the Native American Political Leadership Program.

During that experience in politics, Soto has continued his service in the military. Now currently employed as a Youth Engagement Specialist for the National Indian Child Welfare Association, Rudy often travels throughout the United States where he works to preserve and protect American Indian children and families. He is passionate about sharing his story with youth in hopes of inspiring them to overcome the similar obstacles he has faced.

*It's hard to trust a designer when all you have is a web page and a portfolio.
That's why every time I finish a project I ask my clients to write me a testimonial.
It's the best way to show you what it's like to work with me.*

*I wanted to find a creative designer that could interpret my designs for a playful yet professional set of icons, Andrea did exactly that. Professionalism is an understatement, every email and communication was answered promptly and all my changes were executed perfectly!
He truly is a great designer and I would recommend him to anyone!*

I approached Andrea because I needed a logo and a business card. When I received his initial proposal I knew he was spot-on and the final version is exactly what I was expecting. The simple, unpretentious project fulfills my requirements completely. Working with Andrea is a pleasure. I strongly recommend him for his full professionalism.
